A letter from

Karen Azlen, CEO

Dear Delegates,

It is with great pleasure once again that I welcome you all to the 4th Canadian Alternative Investment Forum. Our Partner Sponsor, CI Investments, has graciously agreed to host our forum in their spectacular space and we anticipate this experience will be delightful for everyone in attendance. We thank our generous sponsors and advertisers who are all showcased in this event publication for their support of this distinctive industry forum.

As always, we are proud to bring you an exceptional line-up of alternative investment professionals who will offer their wisdom and insight as it relates to their panel topics. For a unique experience we introduce Mike Lipkin as our keynote speaker today. As we can all use a good dose of motivation from time to time, Mike is sure to provide a feel good experience for us all.

As Introduction Capital expands its value proposition to its clients and industry peers, I have become acutely aware of the impact of using proper communication decorum as we build and enhance our relationships. In a business world where we all must manage so many (perhaps too many) moving parts on a daily basis, I have found that we make compromises so that we can take on more, accomplish more, achieve more, but with less of our precious time. However, how we communicate with one another, whether it is in person, on the telephone or in writing is paramount to the quality of our relationships as our communication style carries the nuance of our intentions.

Upon first learning about the concept of "generous listening" I took pause and then knew therein laid a lost art. When we choose to listen generously to our clients, colleagues and peers it is then that they know they are being "heard". It is when we know we are being "heard" that the tone is set for the establishment and subsequent deepening of a trusting relationship. The two cans and a string image on the cover of this publication came to me instantly when I thought about the meaning of communication. The sending and receiving of information can have a more optimal effect when we add consciousness to our dialogue with one another.

Introduction Capital continues to embrace our relationship-brokering role within the alternative investment industry at home and abroad. We continue to be a point of access for both investors and providers of alternative opportunities globally. With the ever-increasing attention we place on establishing and growing meaningful relationships, we continue to refine our abilities to precisely match capital with opportunities. Thank you again for sharing this day with us. With our dedicated networking breaks we encourage you to communicate with one another -- engage, listen generously and be present. You never know what opportunity will manifest itself.

Warm regards,

Karen Azlen

Rosalind Capital Partners L.P. (the “Fund”) invests only in the life sciences sector. The goal of the Fund is to maximize absolute returns relative to the volatility of the portfolio. The Fund is uncorrelated to the market in two respects:

- Catalyst driven – The Fund arbitrages risks related to events that are typically uncorrelated with the market.
- Balance of longs and shorts – The Fund aims to generate alpha from both longs and shorts. At the same time, shorts have historically helped to offset losses in the long book during periods of market distress.

RP Investment Advisors (“RPIA”) is an asset manager based in Toronto that specializes in absolute return fixed income strategies and interest-rate risk management. The firm was founded in 2009 by a group of partners who previously ran the fixed income operations globally for RBC Capital Markets and each bring more than 20 years of debt market expertise and international capabilities to the firm.

We aim to provide strong, absolute returns in fixed income through active security selection, interest-rate management and a focus on wealth preservation. Our skill set and fund structure provides an edge in today’s challenging interest-rate environment. We have over $1.3B in assets under management and our partners are collectively one of the largest investors in our funds alongside foundations, pensions and private clients in Canada and Offshore. Our Funds include RP Fixed Income Plus – an active, investment grade bond fund which hedges interest rate exposure and RP Debt Opportunities – a long/short investment grade credit hedge fund.

To date, our strategies have produced industry-leading returns. In 2013, the firm was awarded Best Relative Value Hedge Fund by Morningstar* and Best 3 Year Annualized Sharpe Ratio by the Canadian Hedge Fund Awards.

ALTERNATIVES & DIVERSIFICATION; DIGGING A LITTLE DEEPER!

Many a financial commentator continues to declare that diversification has failed us. According to Dr. Christopher Geczy, Director of Wharton's Wealth Management Initiative, "Diversification has not failed. What fails repeatedly is portfolio construction. The vast majority of investors simply do not have exposure to enough different asset classes". The design of an asset allocation strategy that can weather (hopefully) the turbulence of the markets through time, while attempting to meet a specific return objective, is no easy task. It's also a process that is made potentially more complicated if it includes allocations to alternative investment strategies.

Diversification can fail if an investor doesn't appropriately categorize and organize their universe of investment opportunities. We categorize asset classes and investment strategies into four "buckets" - Cash, Less Equity Correlated (LEC), More Equity Correlated (MEC), Real Assets (Inflation Hedges) - defined according to their underlying drivers of return, and not by their product 'label' which is the traditional allocation model. The key here is in properly identifying an investment's underlying equity beta sensitivity, something that is a little more challenging with alternatives, but fundamental if they are to be used effectively as portfolio diversifiers. Remember, hedge funds are not an asset class, they are intended to generate alpha by allocating to asset classes; stocks, bonds, commodities and currencies.

Allocating to Alternatives

Consider the analysis below showing the historical correlation of three recognized hedge fund indices (proxy for Global Macro, Multi-Strategy and Equity Long/Short strategies), and three broad market benchmarks, to the MSCI All World Country Index for the period January 1993 to January 2014. Also shown are their respective annualized returns (US$) over the period, and their cumulative return through the Global Financial Crisis (December 2007 - April 2009). Note, the returns of the TSX and DEX indices are in C$. Source; Windham Capital Management

	Correlation	Return	GFC
Global Macro - HFRI Macro (Total)	0.33	4.7%	2.8%
Multi-Strategy - HFRI RV: Multi-Strategy	0.72	5.1%	-10.4%
Equity Long/Short - HFRI Equity Hedge (Total)	0.94	6.0%	-16.5%
MSCI All Country World Index	1.0	9.8%	-30.3%
S&P/TSX Composite	0.87	9.2%	-21.3%
DEX Government Bond Index	0.01	5.1%	8.0%

Based upon this correlation analysis, Global Macro should be considered for allocation into the Less Equity Correlated (LEC) component of the portfolio, alongside traditional Government and investment-grade fixed income investments. Equity Long/Short should be considered as equity beta, as should Multi-Strategy, and allocated into the More Equity Correlated (MEC) bucket of the portfolio.

Looking at the return of all six indices through the Global Financial Crisis is one way of assessing their downside risk potential. Global Macro generated a worthwhile positive return through the period, justifying its diversification benefits within the LEC component of the portfolio. Multi-Strategy declined in value, although not dramatically so. Multi-Strategy may be considered as a more defensive allocation in a portfolio, which is true relative to broad equities, but based upon this analysis, it's not an investment that can be relied upon as an anchor in a turbulent environment.

The analysis also highlights the benefits of Equity Long/Short within the context of a well-diversified portfolio. According to HFRI data shown in the previous table, Equity Long/Short has historically performed broadly in line with equities over the longer term but with considerably less risk. While these strategies certainly declined during the Global Financial Crisis along with broad equity markets, they declined considerably less in value. Equity Long/Short may be an excellent complement to traditional equity beta within the MEC component of the portfolio. The capital market assumption we assume for Equity Long/Short within our portfolio construction process is the same return as global equity, but with two-thirds of the volatility (standard deviation). Adding those characteristics into the portfolio may help to lower its overall risk.

Risk: A Forward-Looking Perspective

The correlation analysis we considered earlier was based upon a historical average, the typical approach followed by the investment industry. But is the construction of a well-diversified portfolio based upon historical averages of risk (correlations and standard deviations), the most appropriate methodology to follow? We would strongly argue that it is not.

	Normal (Average)	Turbulent Regime
HFRI Macro (Total)	5.1%	6.0%
HFRI Multi-Strategy	5.5%	9.2%
HFRI Equity Hedge (Total)	9.4%	13.5%
MSCI All Country World Index	18.6%	24.7%

The portfolio construction process is made challenging by the fact that risk relationships among asset classes are not stable through time. To address this within our investment process, we use a methodology that separates historical returns into those associated with normal times (the average of an entire data set) and those associated with periods of market turbulence. The two are quite different, as the table above shows. For example, the standard deviation for the Multi-Strategy Index for the period January 1993 to January 2014 was 5.5%. However in periods of market turbulence, which amounted to only 15% of the entire data set, it spiked to 9.2%, an increase of approx. seventy per cent! (Source; Windham Capital Management). Note the stability of Global Macro in the turbulent regime, underscoring the role these strategies can potentially play in the portfolio.

In addition to the spike in volatility, correlation relationships across risky assets often break down during periods of market turbulence. Said differently, diversification properties across asset classes that are assumed based upon an 'average' risk measure can disappear during times of market stress, just the time the investor needs them. A portfolio constructed using risk assumptions based upon a historical average may significantly understate its level of risk. Conversely, a portfolio built using risk assumptions that place a greater weight on risk relationships prevalent in periods of market turbulence, should be more resilient during periods of market volatility. Stress testing, which allows one to assess a portfolio's loss potential in a 'worst case scenario', should be an integral step in the asset allocation process. Although no approach can predict future events, this analysis helps to set investor expectations appropriately. This is important as an investor's ability to withstand losses directly impacts their ability to stay invested for the long term.

AVOIDING STATIC

Public Markets are exposed to varied degrees of static emanating from Fed policy to geopolitical tensions. When Ben Bernanke mused openly in the spring of 2013 about maybe sometime starting to taper QE, markets reacted disproportionately. The same was true when Goldman Sachs told markets they believed that Gold had seen its day: investors ran to the fences, triggering an automated sell-off rarely seen before outside a true crisis-driven collapse.

Developments in Ukraine in the dispute with Russia earlier this year are another prime example as to how extraneous circumstances can and will influence behaviour on publicly traded markets. The brewing political crisis brought global equities down, and Gold up. Déjà-vu all over again. It only took one predictable but heavily criticized maneuver by Putin to have investors in all markets switch risk off and bring volatility back.

To make things worse, global markets are no longer driven by financial institutions and traders making judgment calls. Most of the trading volume on public markets today is generated and controlled by high-frequency algorithms trading automatically on microscopic movement and faster than any human can blink.

Investors find it increasingly difficult to navigate markets that have become so exposed and vulnerable to extraneous influence and the unpredictability of machines. Even professional analysts have trouble making sense of it all. The reports they send out have become about as reliable as a six-month weather forecast for Iqaluit.

There may never have been a truly level playing field for individual investors to trade on. Price-fixing scandals in the Libor and Gold markets as revealed over the past couple of years made this abundantly evident.

While small retail investors are more or less stuck at a gambling table where the odds of winning are stacked against them, investors with significant wealth do have a choice. They can take advantage of the exempt market that is widely insulated from the unpredictability of outcomes on regulated exchanges, as paradoxical as it may sound.

This is why we are advocating that Ultra-High-Net-Worth investors look very closely at underweighting public markets and placing more of their wealth into alternative investments in the exempt and private markets.

Funding a private company with mezzanine debt over a manageable period of time may be a safer play than putting money into a high-yield fund. If due diligence is done properly, that private debt investment may not only pay a higher rate of return; it may also turn out to be much less volatile than the high-yield fund that is uncontrollably exposed to price movements that are hard to explain.

Placing money into a private mortgage investment company (MIC) may turn out to be a better investment than purchasing a mortgage REIT that is publicly listed in New York. The private MIC will not take a valuation hit just because Janet Yellen starts raising rates, but the publicly traded REIT almost certainly will.

Even a private equity investor will achieve more predictability for the money placed in a private company compared to buying stock of a high growth-high risk company that is publicly traded. Public companies need to satisfy the expectations analysts on a quarterly basis and if they don't, will get punished. They are also exposed to liquidity, or lack thereof, if macro-conditions in the market drive investors to de-risk their portfolios. As long as investors are serious about due diligence before making the investment decision, and about managing their risks by being involved as long as they stay invested, a private equity stake may well be less risky and more rewarding than one in public small cap.

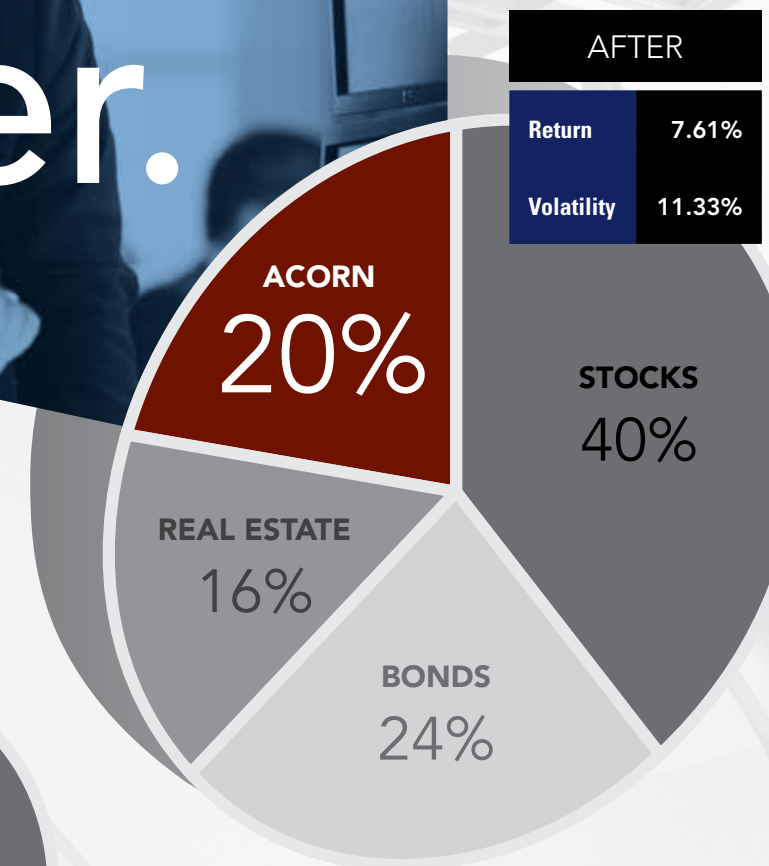

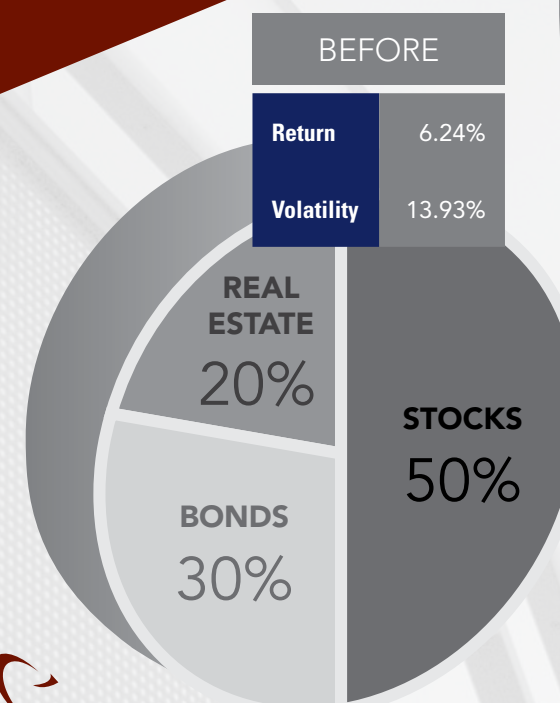

Common knowledge used to dictate that wealthy investors keep a healthy balance between fixed income, cash and equities, with a bit of money put into land and precious metals. Today, the strategy behind asset allocation should no longer only look at public markets and then choose percentages between fixed income and equity. Smart asset allocation in the twenty-first century needs to first look at what percentage should be put into exempt or private markets, at what level of risk, and how much money should be entrusted to public markets.

While public vs. private market allocations will vary in each individual case factoring in elements such as risk appetite and the need for liquidity and cash flow, UHNW investors should use private and exempt markets strategically to reduce exposure to static and investment risk they can't control.

LONG LIVE THE QUEEN

You may have heard the world is made up of atoms and molecules, but it's really made up of stories. - William Turner

In a world where quantitative analysis has been king, qualitative analysis is the new reigning queen. And why shouldn't she be? She is intuitive and she wields the weapon of insight. She understands that risk may not be fully assessed by using information that is provided by numbers alone. She is forward-thinking. She is driven by goals of abundance and prosperity.

Qualitative review expands the universe of questions that are asked and will delve deeper into the "how" and the "why" of an investment scenario. It allows for a conversation with the people behind the numbers. It brings forth critical information about the realities of the situation – both the opportunity under review and the business that is promoting it. Ultimately, it allows for complexity to be reintroduced where the numbers have stripped it out in quantitative reporting.

Qualitative assessment allows one to gather important information on motivations, opinions, experience, pedigree and other background material that cannot be quantified. In the investment space, qualitative analysis illustrates how other factors can impact performance numbers. It acknowledges that there are subjective forces behind investment situations that have informed past performance and may continue to impact future results.

All this is not to say quantitative analysis should be dismissed. Where the intention of an investment is to perform well relative to the competition, numbers are still the most important things to consider...at the outset, at least. However, numeric data will prove more valuable to investors when informed by non-quantitative details. Investment decisions are not made by looking at snapshots in time. Consideration of a variety of factors is crucial, including elements specific to the investor (risk appetite, time horizon, goals, etc.) and to the investment opportunity (volatility, targets, stress testing, etc.) It is the qualitative review over and above the quantitative data that provides insight beyond the point of the initial allocation; thus, helping make informed investment decisions.

Critics of the qualitative approach will note that qualitative analysis makes it hard to compare investment opportunities against peers since there is no defined measurement or baseline. Unlike quantitative results that can be trusted because the findings are measured and there is little room for bias, qualitative reviews are untidy and unconstrained. Tangential information is considered, perceptions are reviewed, and histories and beliefs come into play.

Putting a qualitative overlay on quantitative information allows for holistic interpretation of the investment situation at hand. It illuminates the fallacies in relative performance - it is often not a comparison of apples to apples. Sometimes you find a cowboy in the bushel. It may magnify the flaws in the foundation. However, it is not always the negative that is highlighted. Qualitative analysis has the ability to uncover a rare stone that with careful excavation, strategic partnership and quality advice will prove to be a winning investment.

There is no question that qualitative review operates in an uncontrolled environment where one's 'gut' may have a greater role than other spheres of investment analysis. This type of examination seeks an understanding of relationships amongst the mathematical figures. It observes and forms opinions on the interactions within the infrastructure. Nevertheless, if experienced analysts interpret this information collected correctly it can produce reliable information. After all, "experience is the teacher of all things" (Julius Caesar).

Where we get our qualitative analysis is important. Unlike quantitative data that can result in the same results regardless of the analyst, qualitative review allows for greater variance. Seek out the assistance of experts who have the experience to ask the right questions – they know the industry, the players and the products. Rely on the information derived from specialists who aren't afraid to ask the hard questions – they question intention, motivation and drivers. Depend on trusted advisors with whom you have built a meaningful relationship.

The blending of qualitative and quantitative methods is becoming increasingly acknowledged in many industries, including the alternative investment space. While some may approach the integration as a hierarchy where one method is more important than the other, a partnership may be the more sensible approach. Recognizing the strengths and weaknesses of each will allow for an optimal merger between the two. As it turns out, our qualitative queen and our quantitative king may be the perfect couple after all. Each contributes something to the relationship that the other does not have. Together they can be more powerful than on their own....and alone, they may only be able to tell part of the story.
